Perry Construction Management Primes Submittal for Construction Management Services Contract for United States Army Corps of Engineers

Teams with Leading Federal Contractors for Proposed Construction Management Services Contract

Perry Construction Management (PCM) announced today serving as the prime contractor for a multi-party teaming agreement with leading federal contractors. The agreement was formed as the basis for a proposed IDIQ contract with the United States Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) to provide a wide range of construction management services for military and civil projects.

Each contractor fulfills an essential aspect of the solicitation. Formal Teaming Agreements have been formed with:

Federal Government agencies encourage contractor teaming for several reasons. Teaming arrangements between qualified contractors are a proven method to deliver successful projects. A formal Teaming Agreement sets expectations and provides for efficient communication between contractors for the delivery of services to the agency. Each team member delivers the services that best matches their strengths and area of expertise. This allows more and smaller businesses to compete and win contracts for which they may not independently qualify.

Every team member brings a distinguished track record of success and reputation for client satisfaction.

“Teaming Agreements are important for meeting a client’s needs and for building industry relationships,” said Greg Myers, Director of Federal Programs for PCM. “We researched and approached organizations that offered complementary skills and experience and had core values similar to our own. Each teaming partner under this submittal is expert in their field and prepared to meet the needs of the USACE.”
